Harmony,

the ability to cooperate and coexist, is everywhere. Here, at St Josephs and Notre Dame, it is always present, whether between students and teachers, classes and communities, or learning and leisure. Yet, with this harmony, there are differences which make life unique. People are different, classes are different, and the things we do and enjoy are different. In this year's REFLECTIONS, we would like you to see how, even with harmony, opposites can exist. They are what give our lives council officers worked diligently to accomplish many programs. They started with Welcome Week and didn't stop until the year's end. Though many of their efforts were not seen, they laid the groundwork for the years to come. The student body presidents were successful in planning the year's activities and organizing them to perfection, thus proving their ability to be spectacular day for Notre Dame and St. Joseph's students was an event to remember. It was the first school picnic of the year at Lincoln Park. Along with the scorching afternoon, food, and activities planned by the Student Council was the crazy water fight that lasted throughout the entire picnic. "It was really fun!" a soaking wet victim said. But everyone seemed to agree that it was a time of making new acquaintances, strengthening old friendships, and creating their own

that was present at St Joseph's Notre Dame High School this year was especially strong as the activities for Spirit Week got underway. It was obvious that all classes put much effort into the various categories. With ranging themes from "Channel 18", "Looking Back on T.V.", "Channel Seven", and "Cartoons", the classes showed the spirit of Christian unity. This year, five trophies were given, the sophomores winning stunts, the seniors winning sportsmanship, and the juniors winning skit, decorations, and overall. With a new and more balanced format, students more freely showed spirit, both in the school and in the chosen theme

These services were made festive through a variety of new methods of student participation. The celebrations helped to enhance Christian spirit and were truly beneficial for paper sacks, containing the ultimate treasure, lunch, became a thing of the past this year. The additional vending machines provided a new source of food as well as a lunchtime gathering place. Besides the hall and cafeteria, the senior-free yard was filled with frolicking freshmen, super-active sophomores, and jumping juniors. Thanks to the student council, the activities ranged from volleyball to pumpkin carving. With all of these activities, lunch eating was rare. Most of the student body said hello to fun and good-bye to lunch

-ping right down to the school dances of 1980-1981 was what many students and their friends did. Whether at a formal dance like the Prom or Winter Ball or attending one of the monthly dances, common styles could be seen and they ranged from wild and wacky jumps and shakes to sophisticated and serious slow dancing. This year dances were not only for dancing, they were for having fun. With all the excitement experienced, everyone agreed that next year they would again do

Creative

Arts students in 1980-81 had opportunities never before offered in our schools. In addition to music and art, classes in speech, drama, dance and sewing added new dimensions to the program. Mrs. Reeves, Mrs. Valle, Ms. Micheli and Mrs. Dowling were joined by Miss Gabelman and Mrs. O'Neill, and all worked hard to give every student the opportunity to express his unique

Then

it was 1881, and four Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur established Notre Dame Academy near St. Josephs Church in what was to be the city of Alameda. With a curriculum based on Christian vocation, the Sisters labored, with God's help, to mold our school into one of academic excellence. In the past 100 years, the goal of our school has never wavered. Combining religious education with social and intellectual growth—these were and are the standards of Notre Dame, both in the past proved to be an effective theme this year as the fearless yearbook staff panicked their way to the always dreaded and sometimes postponed deadlines. Truth and justice prevailed though, as they drew, wrote, typed, and turned in their assignments almost always on time. With a wide range of personalities and duties, group activities managed to vary from spur of the moment Saturday pizzas to negotiating firm and important friendships to the school, the members of the freshman class spent their time becoming a part of the school's mainstream while trying to hide the fact that they were the new kids on the block. As usual, the telltale signs of squeaky voices, short bodies, and long skirts gave them away. Another obvious sign which distinguished them from the rest was their ability to become an integral, necessary factor in the overall atmosphere of the school. Despite the handicaps of being freshmen, the class of '84 proved itself to be a group of the future, a group of

The boys, led by Mark Dunleavy, and the girls, led by President Guilla Quintero, tried to get their respective councils united on all issues. Usually they were successful, and reached a compromise. "Usually they were successful, and reached a compromise. "Usually WE got ideas in order and reaching our goals was difficult, but possible," said homeroom representative, Steve Babjak. Looking back on their junior year, the class of '82 agreed that they would not have made it without the leadership of their class officers. The influence of Joyce Lenschmidt and Hugo Menendez was essential to the juniors in planning their activities. The "pre-seniors" owed the success of their Junior Prom, Winter Ball, and fundraisers to the example of their good leaders. They hope that their senior year will be just as

Led by their coach, Mr. Coakley, the new faces of the team learned quickly just what cross country is all about. As one runner put it, "Cross country is both a team sport and an individual sport." With striving effort it was always difficult for other teams to beat our

is a great word to describe this year's soccer team. As the year rolled onward, the members of the St. Joseph's soccer team maneuvered their way to victory after victory. Coached by Eric Ivory, the team learned how to work together and formed long-lasting fellowships. When the season ended, everyone agreed that it was a time of hard work and great strikes, you're out. These were words rarely heard by this year's Pilots baseball team. The athletes perfected their hitting, pitching, and running under direction from Mr. Chris Sims. Long hours of practice and aching muscles resulted in a great season and great games and great fans who responded with wild applause and the hoop! Dribble! Pass and guard! These words became very familiar to Ms. Kerry Williams' girls' basketball team. Ms. Williams felt that although the team was young, their future was bright. After a lot of discipline, the group was tougher, more poised, and had gained much experience. Said one member, "We have a better team than last year. We might even make it to the Superbowl." These dedicated girls may someday contribute to the world of basketball. Who knows? They may even be

The "Strokes" also raced such teams as University of Oregon, University of Washington Frosh, and Jessie's Lake Ewana Crew. Coached by Mr. Chris Sims, the team felt that the best way to achieve success was through practice and discipline. Many upper classmen admired the determination of their younger schoolmates who were on the team. "They try hard and have a good chance of winning," said one junior. For the Pilots, there was no such thing as second best, and no such thing as stopping until they reached the very top. CONTRAST!—THE ULTIMATE!

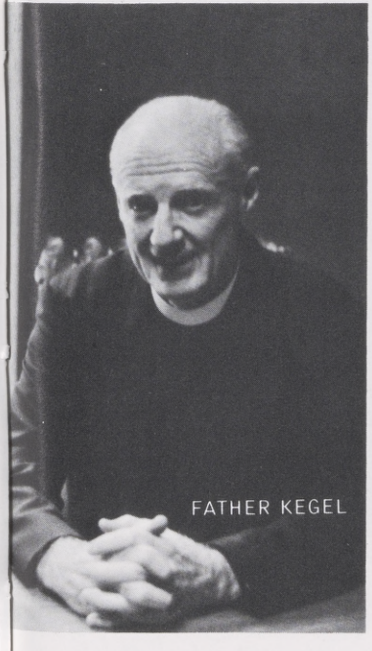
FATHER GRACIAS

A tiny household catch phrase, "Comparisons are odious.", may be helpful in avoiding certain commonplace vices. However, this phrase from Cicero's Orations, does not include a very productive element in comparisons, namely, "Contrasts". For contrasts provide us with the realization of differences and stimulate our motivation in the pursuit of virtue and holiness.

Contrast is the recognition of the difference between content of opposites, and the recognition of the degree of difference among affirmatives. The artist does this by the presentation of truth and teachings, as well as the Presence of Jesus Christ. The saint is always pro Christ, yet remains aware of contrasts between acceptance and rejection, effort and failure, truth and error.

An excellent contrast is found in G.K. Chesterton's definition of a saint: "One who cherishes what the world neglects but the world needs most." This is illustrated by the contrast between pleasure and happiness, namely, the pleasures proposed by the world and the happiness guaranteed by Christ. Thus Vanities on one side and, on the other, supreme happiness not made by hands.



FATHER KEGEL

MONSIGNOR DONOVAN

Another example of contrast is found in a reflection from "The Imitation of Christ": Without Jesus the Christian is an abyss of misery. For Jesus was given to us by the Eternal Father to be the Way, the Truth, and the Light. To be the friend of Jesus means to possess His spirit and His virtues, that is, to possess Jesus Himself with a lively faith, firm hope, and ardent charity. If we possess Jesus in this manner, we possess all the riches in the world."

The ultimate contrast is between life and death, between the eternal and the temporal, between glory and ignominy, between infinite gain and eternal loss. The ultimate contrast was pronounced by Christ Himself when He exclaimed with unity, cohesion, and emphasis: "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his own soul; or what exchange shall a man give for his soul?"

Miss Cup Marries

San Francisco by Zorro

The fabulous Miss Cup is just in from the Bahamas. As the society page of the NEW YORK TIMES was eager to point out, she's married now; but never fear, she's still the same old, endearing, terrifying, omniscient Miss Cup. (Oh, and the twins are due around mid-October, just in time for the '81 meetings.) Of course, she's here just to see YOU; it is a rare event, so make each moment count. She will not, however, disclose when she has arranged to return to the Islands, although word is out that she will return within the season. Perhaps one of YOU readers will be able to entice her to stay. But if you can't, don't worry; she'll be back someday. Until then, take care, and know she's with YOU in spirit. Love always,
